

Match these words with pics:

Ridiculous

Objective

Purse

Bargain

Power struggle

Financial plan

Here's a list of common stereotypes people have when doing business with Chinese people. Which ones do you think are true?

1. They value "saving face" very much and will avoid any situation that makes someone feel embarrassed.
2. The Chinese do not like saying "no" directly, so they use long, dramatic acts to make you feel silly.
3. Chinese business people often prefer to build a personal relationship before signing any official contracts.
4. The Chinese man often asks for his wife's advice on doing business.
5. Chinese negotiators are known for being very patient and may use long silences to get a better deal.
6. The Chinese use social pressure just to make sure that you buy the item.
7. Chinese sellers are frugal and hate giving discounts because their main goal is to get every cent.
9. They are tough negotiators who might increase the price if you leave and come back to the shop.

Watch a comedy sketch - which of the stereotypes above does Russell Peters make fun of?

Russell Peters, like any good comedian, is also skilled at parodying Chinese speakers of English.

What do you think makes the Chinese accent so unique?

Review the vocabulary for grammar discussion:

- Consonant: A speech sound (e.g., b, c, d).
- Vowel: A speech sound (e.g., æ, ɒ, ɛ, i:, ɪ, ɔ:, ʊ, u:, ʌ, ə — use IPA transcriptions).
- Conjugation: Changing a verb to show tense, person, etc. (e.g., walk → walked).
- Staccato: Short, clear, separate sounds.
- Tonal language: A language where pitch changes a word's meaning.
- Syllable: A single unit of speech or "beat" in a word.

You're going to watch a video about the five steps of a generalized Chinese accent.

Fill in the missing words, then watch and check:

simplified unintentionally replaced equal extra

- ➔ Step 1: Pronouncing Ending Consonants – English words ending in consonants often get an a) _____ vowel sound (e.g., "book" → "book-uh").
- ➔ Step 2: Replacing "TH" Sounds – Mandarin lacks "th," so it's b) _____ with "d" or "s" (e.g., "this" → "dis").
- ➔ Step 3: Dropping Verb Tenses – Verb conjugations are c) _____; past/future forms use the base verb.
- ➔ Step 4: Using Single Syllables (Staccato) – Words are spoken with sharp, d) _____ emphasis on each syllable.
- ➔ Step 5: Infusing Tones – Mandarin tones (flat, rising, falling) e) _____ affect English pitch patterns.

How many vowel and consonant sounds are there in the word "queue"?

How many syllables does it have?

What possible conjugations of this word can you think of?

Break down these words:

Rhythm, Colonel, Eucalyptus, Sixth

Listen to a short story about Annie read by a Chinese female English speaker. Then, apply everything you've learned about the Chinese accent from the video above and try to retell the story in your own words.