Cultural Appreciation VS Cultural Appropriation

- _____ is when people from a powerful group take things from a smaller or less powerful culture - like their clothes, symbols, or traditions - and use them for fashion or to make money. This is often disrespectful because they use these items without asking or understanding their history, treating something special like a simple costume.
- _____ is when people show true respect by learning about another culture and its history. They join in traditions because they want to understand the real meaning and the people who created them. They act as students or guests and always give credit to the original culture instead of pretending the ideas are their own.

Look at the pictures of cultural appropriation. Match the examples to the countries/nations they were appropriated from:

Japan
West Africa
India
Native American

Ivory Coast
Pakistan
China
Ojibwe people

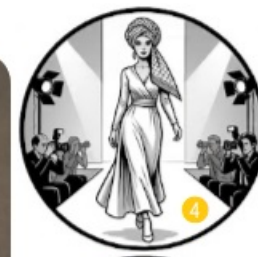

Listen to a podcast to check your answers. What is the cultural significance of each object in the pictures that is often missed by its modern-day users?

"Ultimately, the goal isn't to say we can't enjoy these things, but rather to encourage us to move away from just 'taking' and toward truly honoring the people and histories that gave them to the world." - Do you agree with the host?

- Do you find any of these appropriations offensive or disrespectful toward the countries and cultures they come from? Why or why not?
- Do you do or use any of the things in the pictures? Share your experience. Can you think of some other examples of cultural appropriation?
