Angry Birds has almost been forgotten since its 2009 release. Why?

Read the character descriptions and match each underlined personality trait with its explanation:

"Red is relentless in protecting the flock's three eggs, he has become overly paranoid and short-tempered".

"Jay, Jake and Jim, known as the Blues, these three hatchlings are brothers. They are immature and mischievous, but are clever and capable in battle".

"Chuck is super fast and hyperactive. He is very competitive and strives to prove his worth to Red, whom he sees as a hero."

"Bomb has explosive temper, he is laid-back and fun-loving, often playing with the Blues. He gets easily bored while making chores."

"Matilda is a pacifist and, as the "mother hen" of the flock, takes good care of the other birds with her homemade meals. However, she is also extremely short-tempered, and any criticism of her food makes her furious."

"Hal, known as the Boomerang Bird, is down-to-earth and adventurous, and is good friends with the other birds, but is not often involved in their fights against the pigs."

"Terence known as the Big Brother, is a very destructive bird, which coupled with his terrifying appearance makes him a valuable asset of the Angry Birds. Terence lives in self-imposed isolation from the other Birds, who see him as unpredictable."

"The Mighty Eagle, also known as just Mighty has formed a close bond with the Blues, who frequently visit him to listen to his war stories. He became grumpy over time and gets angry at anything that disturbs his peace."

Rovio has licensed its brand to many other companies, and the product range under the Angry Birds brand is enormous. However, none of these products have become more successful than the original game.

In English, this phenomenon is called a one-hit wonder - a single mainstream hit song, product, or game that overshadows the company's other work, often with popularity decreasing immediately afterward.

- Do you think Angry Birds is a one-hit wonder?
