

Tiny Joys & Rituals

How would you define these terms?

Match the tiny joys and rituals to the pictures.

- Enjoying a beautifully plated meal.
- Playing a vinyl record.
- Listening to the sounds of nature.
- Sipping a warm drink by the window.
- Making homemade jam from scratch.
- Relaxing in a warm herbal bath.
- Handwriting a "Thank You" card.
- Wearing a cozy wool sweater.
- Crafting a beaded bracelet.
- Lighting a scented candle.
- Pouring tea from a traditional teapot.
- Browsing books in a shop.

- Which ones have you done recently?
- Which ones would you like to do?
- Which of these rituals bring you the most joy?
- Do you have any other tiny joys or rituals?

1. Uncertainty
2. Anxiety
3. Ritual
4. Focus
5. Comfort
6. Significant
7. Predictable
8. Habit

- A. Something you do often and regularly, sometimes without thinking.
- B. Giving all your attention to one specific thing.
- C. A feeling of worry, nervousness, or unease.
- D. Important, meaningful, or easy to notice.
- E. A state of physical ease or freedom from pain and worry.
- F. The feeling of being unsure about what will happen in the future.
- G. A series of actions always followed in the same order, often for peace of mind.
- H. Happening in a way or at a time that you expect.

The tiny rituals that bring comfort and joy in times of fear and uncertainty

Paul Daley

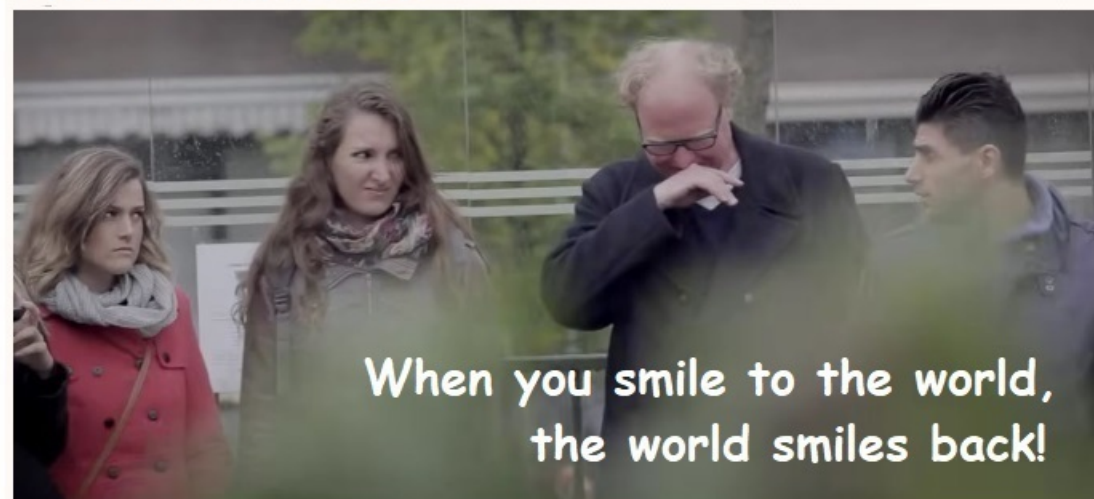

Listen to the podcast and answer the questions:

1. According to Paul, what is the exact main purpose of a "tiny ritual"?
2. How is a ritual different from a habit like brushing your teeth every day?
3. Why does Paul suggest sitting by the window while drinking your morning coffee?
4. Why are predictable actions helpful when the world feels very uncertain and quite big?
5. What is the specific question Paul asks the listeners at the podcast's end?

- Does the process of setting up your desk serve as a ritual that helps you transition into a focused mindset?
- Is there a small, repeatable action you use at the start of a lesson to help you leave daily distractions at the door and switch into 'English mode'?

Watch the video:

Laughing can break the routine and bring joy and a good mood.
It is free and requires only a tiny effort.
So why not laugh every morning?

Can you think of any other tiny joys that we can all experience at minimal cost?