- Do you ever want just a little more money than you already have? (greed)
- Do you ever decide to do your English homework later and never do it? (sloth)
 - Do you ever get jealous when someone has the last slice of cake? (envy)
 - Do you ever eat one more cookie than you really should before bed? (gluttony)
- Do you ever look at other men or women holding your partner's hand while walking? (lust)
- Do you ever wish you could wear a new pair of shoes every single day? (pride)
 - Do you ever get so angry at rude people that you want to punch them in the face? (wrath)

Seven Digital Deadly Sins

The World Wide Web was invented 35 years ago, and now more than 6 billion people use it. How does this internet revolution change our lives, our relationships, and our morals?

Read this article to see our bad online habits. Find out what the seven sins - pride, lust, greed, gluttony, envy, wrath, and sloth - look like in the digital world.

1 Wrath
Writing nasty things about someone online. Creating an internet hate campaign. Trolling the comments section of a website. Tweeting rude comments about someone.

Collecting as many friends and followers on your social network accounts as you can, even if you don't know them. Tracking how many hits your posts, images or uploaded videos get. Producing content with the aim of getting lots of hits.

3 Sloth
Using the internet as an alternative to doing any real work. Joining groups or campaigns that you know nothing about. Shutting yourself off at home and lazing about on the sofa with your computer. Chatting to people you've never met, or doing some online social networking rather than going out with your real friends.

Spending time editing the photos you upload so they always show you in the best possible light. Asking people to remove photos of you that you don't like. Googling yourself every now and then to see what others are saying about you. Boasting about the number of friends you've got on Facebook. Using social networks to chronicle every event in your life.

5 Lust
Having a secret e-mail account your partner doesn't know about. Checking up on your exes. Watching pornography. Sending friend requests to people you find attractive but don't know personally. Joining numerous online dating sites.

Feeling envious about all the exotic places your friends have visited. Getting depressed because other people's lives seem to be more exciting and interesting than yours. Comparing your online profile to other people's. Feeling bad because you haven't got as many online friends as your colleagues.

7 Gluttony
Spending almost every spare moment online. Staying up late so you can do some social networking. Being unable to stop yourself from messaging friends or commenting on Facebook or Twitter posts. Buying things from online shopping sites that you don't even need. Downloading lots of films or music that you'll never have time to watch or listen to.

Read the article and write the name of a sin:

1. Feeling depressed because your friends are all away on holiday. (_____)
2. Writing something horrible about someone. (_____)
3. Buying clothes you don't need from online stores. (_____)
4. Spending a whole day surfing the internet. (_____)
5. Asking one of your partner's friends out on a date. (_____)
6. Trying to get as many online friends as you can. (_____)
7. Carefully editing any photos you upload. (_____)

- Do you boast about your life online just to make others envious?
- Have you ever trolled someone or written a nasty comment just for fun?
- Do you look at someone's profile and think "why is their life so perfect?"
- Do you stay up until 2:30 AM buying things you don't need?

Are you ready to repent?

Every minute aimlessly scrolling on your phone is one minute less doing the things you love.

Online dating is just a new form of online shopping.

Filming yourself giving food to a homeless person turns charity into a performance.

Having 2,000 "friends" online means you don't actually know what friendship is.

Following lifestyle influencers is voluntary depression.

The comment section is where cowards go to feel brave.
